An account classified as a verified Chime account is one in which Chime's identity verification procedure has fully verified the user's identity. Key legal papers, including a Social Security Number (SSN) and a valid government-issued picture identification—such as a driver's license or passport—must be turned in under this process. Chime sometimes additionally asks for a real-time selfie to make sure the given ID matches the account opening individual. The account status is elevated to "verified," therefore giving the user total access to all of Chime's services once this verification is successfully finished. Higher transaction and withdrawal limits, improved security measures, and less account activity limitations are just a few of the great benefits verified accounts provide. Unverified accounts, on the other hand, have restricted functionality and can be subject to smaller transaction ceilings and more chance of temporary freezes or restrictions. Users looking to completely maximize Chime's banking features without interruption must first understand this difference.
